Interprofessional interaction in Health Profession

There is an increasing emphasis on educating future health profession practitioners to learn, with, from, and about each other with the goal of improving health outcomes through more effective interprofessional collaboration (WHO, 2010). Alongside the teaching of core disciplinary skills and professional identity, interactions with other health professionals and students from other disciplines can provide a rich source of clinical experiences to support future interprofessional practice.

This symposium will highlight the importance of “Collaborative and Interprofessional Education for High-Quality Care” and “Interprofessionalism in the training of Health Professionals”. Additionally, the forum will address the issues pertaining to training and the interprofessional practice in healthcare by esteemed the speakers and expert panellists.
